As he bade the president goodby the famous marksman said, with a chuekle, "As it's that they come after, it's just as well to let them have it." Then he went off to the front, with his rifle, his Bible and the regulation 30 days' provisions. He would cautiously approach the advancing English until be found convenient cover within rifle range; then, stretching himself at full length, he would study the enemy's force until he marked a young man whose appearance and bearing showed him to be an officer. Upon this figure the deadly rifle was brought to bear. Then, as the sharp crack rang out and the young officer fell dead, the burgher would leap to his feet, shout "Chamberlain!" and then drop flat again. Once more this programme would be carefully carried out, and when the second victim fell Van Bosboom would carefully retire to safe
